

Berlin's Best Burger: Birthday Edition

MONDAY, DECEMBER 5, 2016 by Soraya Ferdman

Drum Roll please! First, I want to give a shout out to everyone who showed up to help us and the team of Burgers & Hip Hop celebrate the third birthday. The day was cold, but inside Prince Charles we hung out and dined on our picnic tables like it was summer. Huge thanks to the Tatas' Muffin stand (recall: mix between muffin and waffle) who made the whole room smell sweet and buttery. The white Glühwein too, with a slice of apple and orange (optional: extra shot of bourbon but #youdoyou), kept our hands warm as we waited in line for this year's burgers. Speaking of which, BURGERS...

Before sharing the results of Saturday's competition, I want to emphasize how amazing this event's vendors were. So much effort was put into small things: the stand's decoration, making sure the buns were toasted just so, layering the sauces and garnishes carefully but also generously. The vegetarian options were also superrrr on point, I've low key decided to start demanding portobello/red bean/halumi (different burgers) everywhere I go.

Alright, alright I know I'm keeping you waiting. Without further ado, here are all the competitors with the final votes only revealed for the top three:

Winner: Gorilla Barbecue

An actual quote was "this is the burgiest burger that ever existed." Two beef patties, cheddar cheese, pickles, tomato, and whisky onions. Classics are classics for a reason yo, and it won this team 147 votes!! Well fed, danced out, and already looking forward to our next gathering: let's give a big round of applause for Gorilla Barbecue, now two time winner of the coveted Berlin's Best Burger title. Congratulations! falls into food comma

Happiest of birthdays to us and you and everyone who joins us on this ride – See you February 4th!
